In his well-crafted book, Paul Farmer takes "a geographically broad and historically deep" approach to explain the roots of the AIDS accusation afflicting the Haitian community. Leading up to the official warning, the media and a handful of prominent scientists in the U.S. had erroneously concluded that Haiti was the original source of AIDS in the Americas.

History. AIDS in Haitians was first recognized in 34 Haitians living in the United States in 1982, and in the same year eleven individuals in Haiti were suspected to be HIV infected. Since the majority of these individuals did not fall into the classic risk factor groups, Haitians were classified as a separate risk factor group, causing damage to Haiti's image and economy and affecting tourism.

AIDS and Accusation is concerned with refuting these accusations and examining the interesting question of why these were made. On the question of the origins of HIV/AIDS, Farmer's initial arguments that Haiti was neither the ultimate nor the proximate source of the American HIV/AIDS epidemic have been confirmed by modern science.
