Suzanne Spaak (1905-1944) Suzanne Spaak renounced a comfortable middle-class life in Paris to commit herself to the concealment and rescue of the city's Jewish population, particularly children, even using her own family home to hide Jewish children facing deportation.

One of the most well-known of these rescuers (thanks to the Spielberg movie) was Oskar Schindler, the war-profiteer-turned-savior who sheltered over a thousand German Jews by putting them on a famous list. But Schindler was not the only Holocaust hero who used his position, connections, and paperwork to save Jewish lives.
