Britain's John Berger has got to be the widest-ranging Marxist art critic around; and in these 23 assorted essays, 1966-79, he almost apotheosizes into a butterfly. He'll poke around at anything anywhere that might ratify his rather wistful dream of truly socio-historical art. "Why We Look at Animals," the longish lead piece, throws together every quote Berger seems to have been able to find ...

Field, John Berger, 1980 (1971). There are many fields, paths, circles, rings and chains. So many different words, forms of music, songs. These form our cultures and it is our cultures that make us human. Ordinary cultures. Everyday cultures. I think about the field a great deal. Some want to break the rings and chains we make.
