Mind you, we're not talking about the Freudian-style repressive unconscious, but about what is called the 'New Unconscious' in order to distinguish from the Freudian thinking. Even this new 'school' agrees with Freud in one thing: much of our behaviour and decisions are governed by processes of the unconscious mind - much more that we know or would like to and the author argues that it's important to understand the influence of the subliminal in order to overcome many of the ...
