Secularism is the principle of seeking to conduct human affairs based on secular, naturalistic considerations. It is most commonly defined as the separation of religion from civic affairs and the state, and may be broadened to a similar position concerning the need to remove or minimalize the role of religion in any public sphere. The term has a broad range of meanings, and in the most ...

1. The Background. In 1900 Max Planck discovered that the radiation spectrum of black bodies occurs only with discrete energies separated by the value  $h\nu$ , where  $\nu$  is the frequency and  $h$  is a new constant, the so-called Planck constant. According to classical physics, the intensity of this continuous radiation would grow unlimitedly with growing frequencies, resulting in what was called the ...

Liotard develops a critical but nuanced approach towards theory, politics and economics within the terms of the libidinal philosophy. His prime concern is that the structures that exploit libidinal intensities tend to become hegemonic. That is, they tend to claim sole right to the exploitation or interpretation of intensities.

1. Models of faith and their key components. While philosophical reflection on faith of the kind exemplified in religious faith might ideally hope to yield an agreed definition in terms of sufficient and necessary conditions that articulate the nature of faith, the present discussion proceeds by identifying key components that recur in different accounts of religious faith.

Consistent with the history and traditions of the human and social sciences (e.g. D'Andrade, 1986; Habermas, 1972; Zald, 1991), we think it is helpful to distinguish between interests that are geared towards explanation, interpretation, and emancipation (see Table 1). All three kinds of interests, as we aim to show, build on conceptualization ...
